

A COVID CHRISTMAS PARTY Survival Guide

It's that time of year and everyone is gutted that the annual office Christmas party was cancelled. But don't worry, Brad in HR has suggested a virtual Christmas party to keep things festive. This year has been a long, and often lonely one for most of us. Now is not the time to let the inhibitions fly. Here's our advice on some common Covid Christmas party pitfalls.

Dress to impress

Just because your Christmas Party is virtual, doesn't mean you can show up in your dressing gown. Be festive! You're home this year, no need to worry about embarrassing commutes, let the ugly Christmas jumper out.

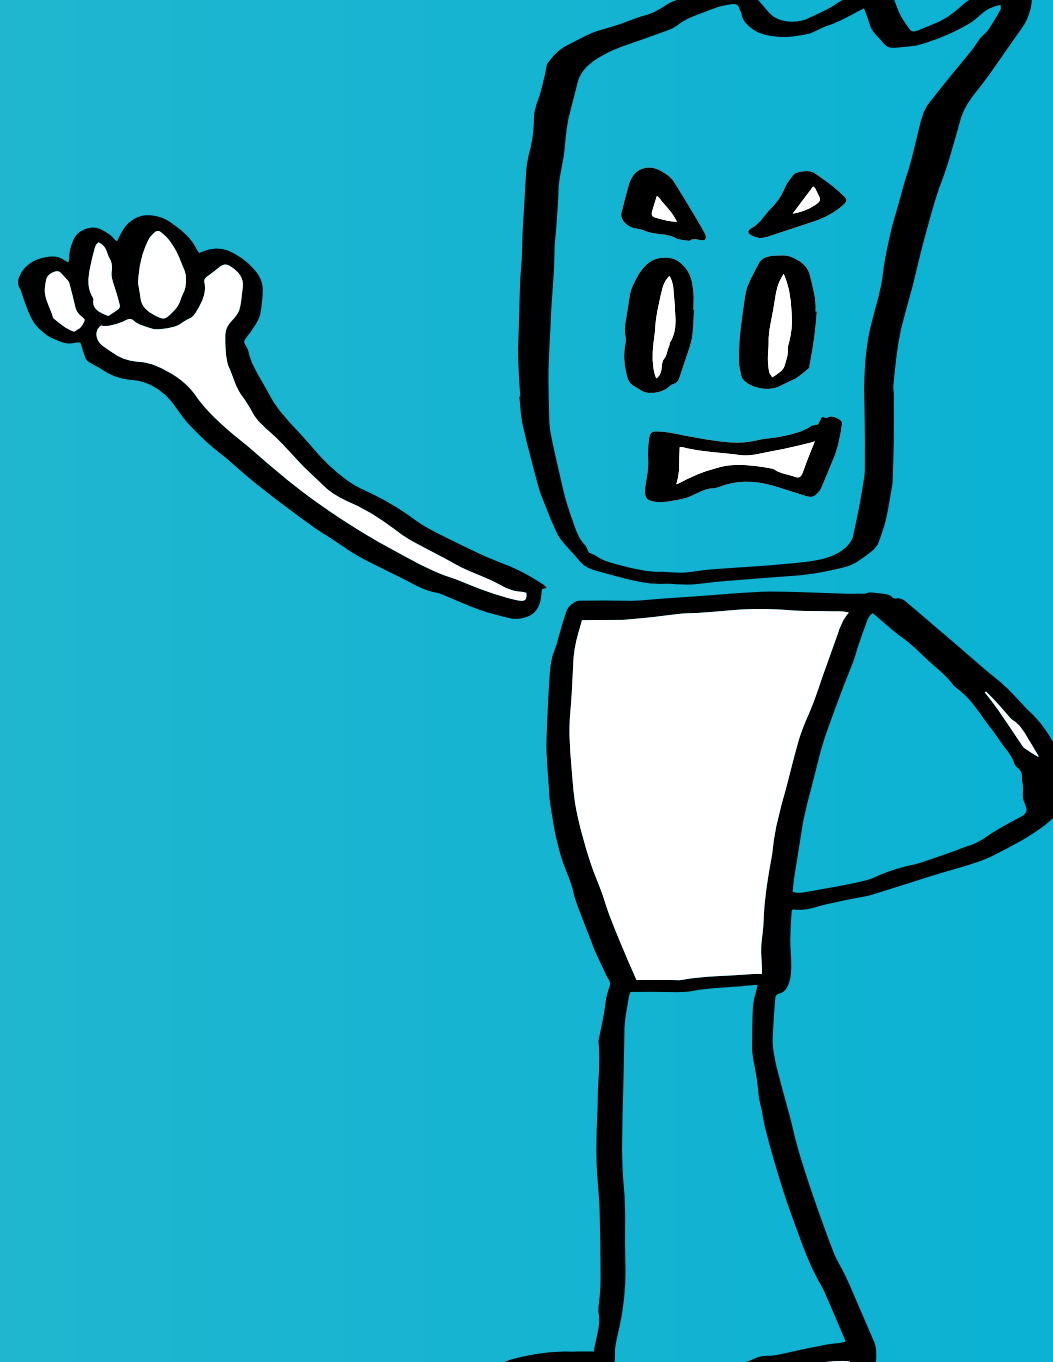

Remain professional

Enjoy yourself. But remember, even though you are at home, you're still at work. Don't forget to wear trousers below that Christmas jumper.

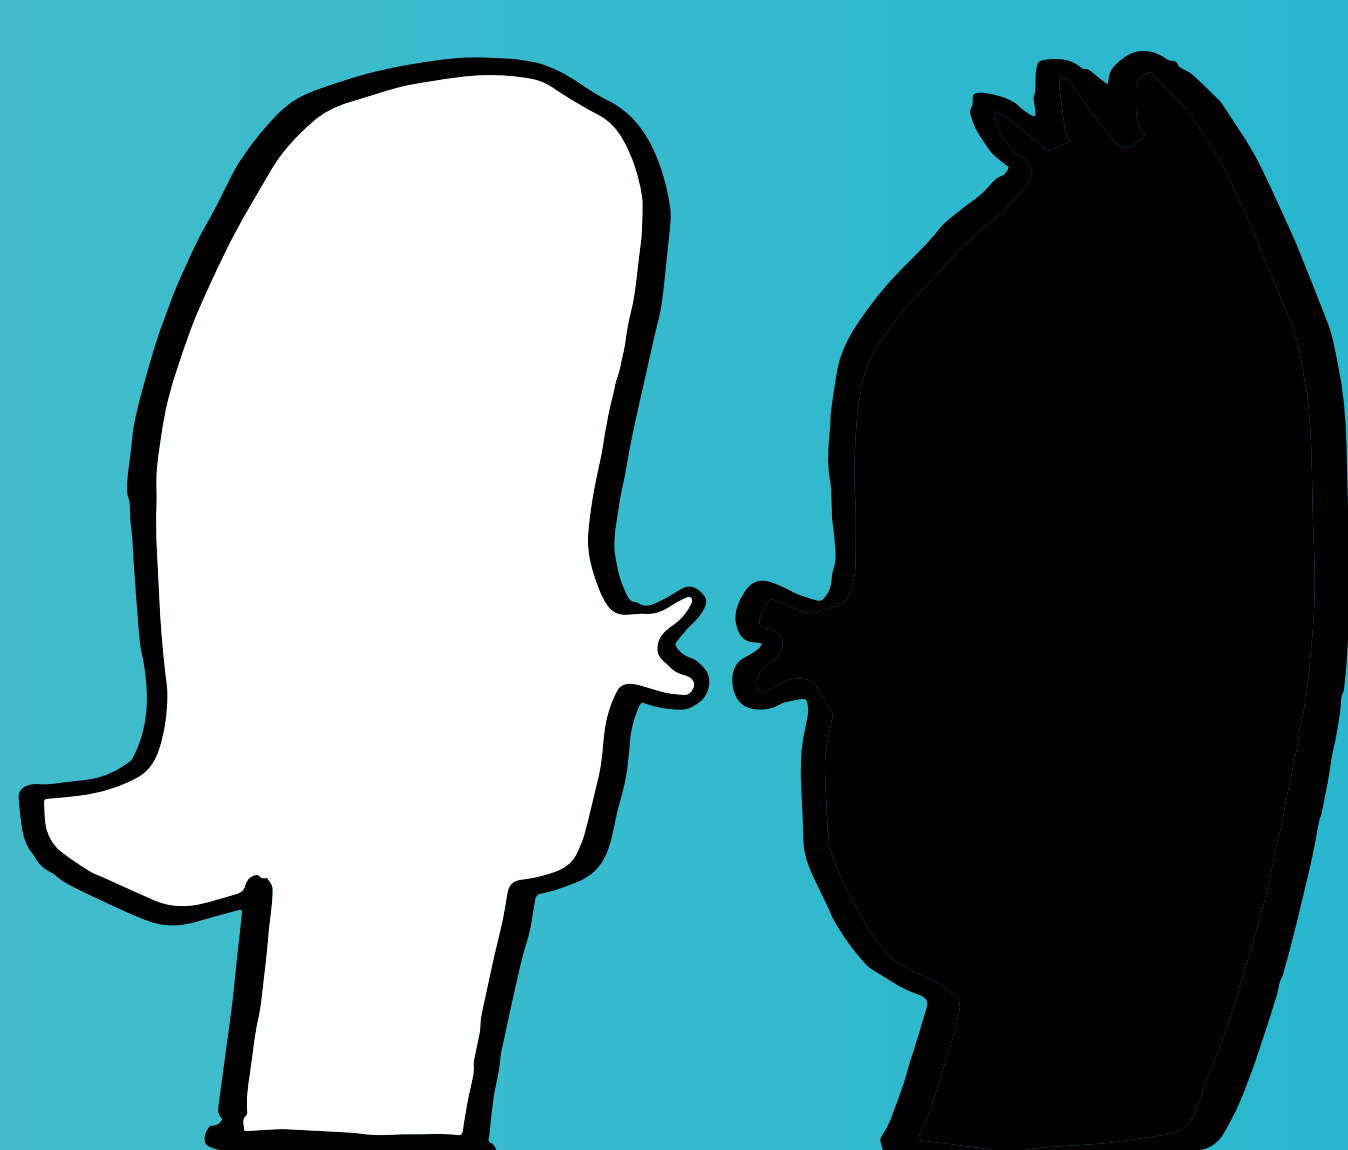

Don't get smashed

It's been a difficult year. We get it. But drinking alcohol affects your inhibitions. Monitor your consumption to avoid any embarrassing moments you may regret later.

Behave yourself

Politics, annoying habits of colleagues, and soap-box speeches to name a few, are all things to avoid at the virtual Christmas party. Remember, everyone is entitled to their opinions and a party is no place for debate or unleashing pent-up frustrations. Relax!

Control your libido

We've all been there. You're crushing on your colleague that you haven't seen face to face in eight months. Trust us. Now is not the time to send Christmas love notes via messenger.

Secret Santa

You're likely skipping Secret Santa this year, so you won't have to worry about giving the wrong thing. But don't forget to supply your team with funds to spend on what they really want. We've heard the elves are talking about prepaid e-gift cards for tidbits and tipple.

However you and your team
are celebrating this year,

Feliz Navidad

聖誕快樂

Joyeux Noël

دي جم داليم دي ع

Frohe Weihnachten

Buon Natale

Prettige Kerstdagen

Feliz Natal

メリー

クリスマス

Linksmų Kalėdų

Merry Christmas
